Product Description

Ultra-Slim 75" QLED Home Television with Built-in Streaming Apps

Product Specifications

TVs with LED backlights have dominated the market. While they don't have the same perfect inky blacks as OLEDs do, they have a few advantages over them, including higher peak brightness and no risk of permanent burn-in. LED TVs are also sometimes called LCDs instead. LED refers to the technology used in the backlight, whereas LCD refers to the technology used to produce different colors and shades. As all LCD models currently on the market use LED backlights, the two terms are often used interchangeably. Check out this guide to learn more about LED TVs and how they work.
